Land Allocations
Further consultations.

I had always understood that major development of any kind in or around motorway junctions was prohibited in the original legislation when the Motorway Network was first begun.

This was to prevent the spawl of development throughout the motorway network. Is this legislation still in force?

If so then the allocation of land for development along the A590 corridor and at Junction 36 would be contrary to the original legislation and would be a return to the Ribbon Development of the pre-war years which was roundly condemned, and in my opinion rightly so, by planners ever since the 1940s.

Alan Lord.
