Dear Mr McNeill

RE: Surface Water Drain, The Lancastrian Ulverston

Thank you for your letters dated 26th June and 14th July 2008 regarding the above matter.

Colleagues inspected the site on Wednesday 9th July during heavy rain and made the following observations.

"The drains on Bigland Drive and on the private pub car park are running well. There was no sign of any standing water or damage to the surface water system."

As such I do not believe that any further action, other than provide monitoring, is required.

Please do not hesitate to contact me if you have any further queries.

Yours sincerely

Nick Raymond

THE Met Office says there is a "high risk of severe weather" in the region from today through to Friday.

Very wet and windy conditions are expected over the next two days, with widespread rain and strong to gale force winds.

Rain will often be heavy, especially over high ground.

Fed-up councillors call for flooding summit

WET, WET, WET: Flooding at the Rope Walk in Ulverston

FED-up councillors in Ulverston have called for a flooding summit in a bid to put an end to the problem.

Heavy rainfall regularly causes havoc in south Ulverston and did so again on November 1 after becks burst their banks.

Ulverston Town Council members vented anger about the problem when they met last week and voted to arrange a crunch meeting as soon as possible.

They have invited representatives from every level of local government, agencies with responsibility for the town's watercourses and residents affected by flooding.

Councillor Phil Lister, deputy town mayor, called for the summit after he claimed Ulverston had been failed for too long by flooding authorities. He told the meeting: "It exemplifies Ulverston is not important enough. If this was Carlisle, Kendal, Ambleside - something would've been done. I propose we convene a flooding summit where we can collate our evidence, bring our photos and lay out our problems and say: 'who is responsible for this and when are you going to do something about it?'"

WATER WORRY: Severe flooding in Ulverston

Councillor Jack Rice told the meeting he believed excess silt in Carter Pool - where the becks run out to sea - was the main cause of the flooding.

Marian Sumpton, a resident of North Lonsdale Road, told the Evening Mail she is angry that planning applications for industrial buildings in south Ulverston continue to be accepted, despite it being a notorious flood plain.

She said: "They want to put up business units. But it's displacing all the water and when you get rising tides, high seas and all this rain we are at risk every time." Ms Sumpton added that Rascals Neighbourhood Nursery in Lund Terrace was flooded and required the fire service to pump out water, and that the Rope Walk at Outcast was "like a stream".

The fire service confirmed it was called out on November 1 to pump water from the nursery's cellar, but Alex Mitton, nursery manager, said the water was just a "minor inconvenience".

A spokeswoman for the Environment Agency said: "There are properties at risk of coastal and river flooding in Ulverston however, these numbers are relatively small, as is the frequency of flooding.

"However, we are conducting a study in south Ulverston, looking at flood risk and how this might be managed in the future. We have met with residents of Steel Street over the last 18 months to discuss short-term options to reduce flood risk to properties in the area.

"We have investigated an option to build a raised defence here, however, this has now been ruled out as it could have adverse effects to other properties in the surrounding area. We are considering alternative options.

"We have also done some channel maintenance in Dragley Beck to help manage flood risk."

Flood relief fund to offer support

FLOOD relief fund has been set up to support families affected by this week's aos. The fund is being led by Furness Building Society and is in aid of the Cumbria Community Foundation. The bank account was set up on Friday. Furness Building Society chief executive Rob Cairns has urged people to contribute. He said: "We have just set it up.

"Anyone who wants to contribute to the fund can come in any branch and make a donation. "It is just a good cause and we want to get involved." People throughout the Lake District and West Cumbria were forced out of their homes during severe floods on Thursday and Friday. Roads, including the A595 at Duddon Bridge, were closed and train services between Barrow and Whitehaven cancelled. Rail passengers were left stranded at stations and commuters heading for Sellafield were forced to stay at home. A policeman was also swept to his death from a bridge in Workington by fast moving water. For more information contact Furness Building Society Barrow branch on 01229 824560 or the Millom branch on 01229 773 671.

Janette,

After our discussions with the Sainsbury's chap and discussions about the sites location at Hill Foot, and my previous occupation in accident prevention. I asked a former colleague (Richard Watt Cumbria Traffic Management Department for Highways) for the accident stats from Stone Cross to Three Bridges.

I have attached his response for your information.

These are only the incidents which were either reported or Police attended.
